

Cloth Beret & Cap Badges

Of the British Armed Forces

Incorporating cap , beret , combat helmet and jungle / floppy hat badges

Cloth Beret & Cap Badges Of the British Armed Forces

This booklet is intended as a guide to the cloth cap, beret, helmet and hat badges worn by other ranks and SNCO's of the UK Armed Forces. All of the images supplied for this pamphlet came from my collection, members of the British and Commonwealth Military Badge Forum (BCMBF), and a few Regimental Museums, to whom I am grateful for sharing a vast wealth of knowledge.

The field of cloth badge collecting is one that will always bring debate. Regiments, Squadrons, Units and even individuals purchasing badges that are not officially sanctioned, slight changes to existing patterns and new designs, all have their talking points.

This guide covers cloth beret badges, which initially seem to have been worn by regiments in Northern Ireland in the 1970s, combat cap badges and those worn on the combat helmet cover. These badges never seemed to be popular within the various regiments and have been adopted by many units including Army, Sea and Combined Cadet Forces and some University Officer Training Corps. Also included are some school badges and civil organisations with military affiliations.

The combat cap, whether called floppy hat, crap hat, desert DPM hat, jungle hat or boonie hat, is immaterial. A number of units wear a cloth patch on the side as a unit identifier. This also applies to helmet badges, worn on various sides of the combat helmet cover, again as a unit identifier. This practice seemed to take off with the beginning of the conflicts in Iraq and Afghanistan.

There are numerous patches that have been worn that have not been illustrated in this booklet and I am sure some of the examples shown have been worn on more than one type of headdress. If you can help with any descriptions or details, or can add more pictures to this living booklet, please feel free to contact me through the BCMBF or by email, and I will add to or amend the Master Copy.

Construction of patches

These patches came in a few varieties of construction, the most common are woven or embroidered. Examples of both below.

Tayforth University Officer
Training Corps Beret Badge,
Embroidered on black felt

Royal Anglian Regiment ACF Beret
Badge, woven example

Patch Edging

The edging of the patches differs from various periods of time and manufacturers. Some of the earlier versions have a plain edging as opposed to the merrowed edging of more modern patches.

Plain Edge

Merrowed Edge

Tartan Patches

Most of the Scottish regiments wore a square of tartan material behind the cap badge on the Tam O'Shanter (if worn). These were also worn, sometimes smaller, on the side of the combat helmet or floppy desert DPM hat.

Royal Scots & KOSB

Officer's Beret Badges

The beret badges shown are other ranks and SNCO issue only and are not to be confused with the superior quality, wire embroidered badges worn by officers. Some examples of which are shown below.

Fakes, Copies, Rejects etc.

Many types of badges have been faked and copied for the collectors market. Also units have rejected patterns which are still in circulation. These are a few of them. I will add a separate section for fakes as and when I get images. The increasing number of companies in Pakistan producing reproduction badges and patches means that the market is being flooded with cheap copies, so beware when purchasing items for your collections.

Locally produced, theatre made items.

Not all of the jungle hat and helmet badges are 'official issue'. When units deployed to the Balkans, Iraq, Afghanistan etc, the 'tradition' was sometimes for a locally produced patch to be made for use by units. These varied in pattern and size and the quality could vary from very good to very poor. These are usually found in small numbers and usually can't be confirmed as actually being worn.

Late additions.

These items have been sent in after the initial publication. They will be added to the main body of the brochure and will be included in future editions.
